2. Theoretical Background

Promotion Mix

Kotler & Armstrong (2019; 116) describe the promotion mix as "a specific blend of advertising, sales promotion, public relations, and personal selling that companies use to communicate in a convincing way to customers about the value of products and at the same time to build good relationships with customers. The promotion mix is broadly described as follows:

1. Advertising

Advertising is a strategic approach to marketing communications used by companies by utilizing various mass media platforms, such as television, radio, newspapers, and the internet, with the aim of providing meaningful and important information to its audience.

2. Sales Promotion

Sales promotion is a strategic approach implemented by companies with the aim of attracting consumer attention to the products or services they offer. This approach involves offering incentives that are given instantly, intended to encourage consumers to purchase these products or services in larger quantities.

3. Direct Marketing

The development of individualized relationships with carefully selected consumers to achieve immediate responses and build ongoing customer relationships is a process that involves various forms of direct communication.

4. Personal Selling

This refers to when a company sales representative speaks directly with customers, both new and existing, with the aim of increasing sales of products or services and building a strong, positive and ongoing relationship with the customer.

5. Public Relations

Public relations involves efforts to build good relationships with various groups in society with the aim of achieving expected levels of exposure, shaping a positive corporate image, and dealing with and managing negative issues, unfavorable publicity, and unwanted situations.

Promotion Strategy

A promotional strategy is a plan or approach designed and implemented by an organization or company to promote their products, services or brands to a specific target market or audience. According to Rangkuti in the journal Rezki & Hapsari, 2019 states that Promotion Strategy is a sales and marketing activity in order to inform and encourage demand for products, services and ideas from companies by influencing consumers to want to buy products and services produced by the company.

TikTok

TikTok is a social media platform that creates a world of friends that connects users from all over the world. Not only Indonesian, but the language of every region of Indonesia to the language of every country in the world. According to Ardiansah & Maharani (2021) social media is a means or forum used to facilitate interaction between fellow users and has the nature of two-way communication, social media is also often used to build a person's self-image or profile, and can also be used by companies as a marketing medium.

Sales Volume

Sales volume is the number of product units sold by a company in a certain period of time. A high level of sales volume indicates that the company has successfully implemented an effective marketing strategy. According to Efendi in Nasution et al. (2017), a factor that greatly affects sales volume is the distribution channel or the place where the product is sold, with the aim of evaluating the potential market that can provide maximum profit.

In essence, the promotion mix, embracing advertising, sales promotion, direct marketing, personal selling, and public relations, forms the backbone of how companies communicate value and foster relationships with customers. This blend acts as a toolkit for businesses, employing strategic approaches across various platforms to convey meaningful information and attract attention. Simultaneously, a well-thought-out promotion strategy, serves as a detailed plan for organizations to inform, encourage demand, and influence consumers to choose their products and services. This strategic alignment is further amplified through the impactful global reach of TikTok, a social media platform connecting users worldwide. As companies leverage TikTok for marketing, it becomes a dynamic forum for interaction, self-image building, and brand promotion.

Ultimately, the culmination of these efforts reflects in sales volume, a metric indicating the effectiveness of implemented marketing strategies. Sales volume is influenced by the distribution channel and the targeted market's potential for maximum profit. In simpler terms, when businesses seamlessly integrate promotion strategies, utilize platforms like TikTok, and strategically manage sales channels, it results in not only effective communication but also tangible success measured by increased product sales over a specific time period.

The elements of the promotional mix, encompassing advertising, sales promotion, direct marketing, personal selling, and public relations, collectively form a strategic toolkit employed by companies to effectively communicate the value of their products and cultivate positive customer relationships. Each element plays a unique role in engaging the audience and influencing purchasing decisions. Adding a contemporary twist to this mix, the social media platform TikTok emerges as a dynamic player in modern promotional strategies. TikTok serves as a global forum that transcends language barriers, connecting users from diverse regions. It not only facilitates interactive communication but also provides companies with a powerful medium to showcase their products, build brand image, and engage with a vast audience, contributing significantly to the overall promotional strategy.

Involving two employees captures operational nuances and workplace dynamics. Five diverse customers contribute varied perspectives, and the focus on eight subscription customers offers depth in exploring sustained engagement. The choice of in-depth interviews ensures detailed responses. Triangulation and SWOT analysis enhance data reliability and provide a structured framework for comprehensive interpretation. This approach allows the research to unfold organically, with sampling decisions evolving dynamically during field engagement, ensuring a nuanced exploration of the researched phenomenon.

Data Analysis Techniques

Triangulation

According to Wijaya (2019: 120-121), it is a technique used to validate information obtained from various sources using various approaches and at different times. So there is source triangulation, triangulation of data collection techniques, and time triangulation. Triangulation enhances the robustness of research design by employing multiple dimensions of validation. Firstly, source triangulation involves cross-verifying information from diverse sources, ensuring a comprehensive and well-rounded understanding of the studied phenomenon. This approach guards against bias and allows for a more accurate representation of the subject. Secondly, triangulation of data collection techniques involves using various methods to gather information, minimizing the risk of methodological limitations and enriching the data with different perspectives. Lastly, time triangulation incorporates the temporal aspect, capturing the subject over distinct periods. By integrating these triangulation approaches, the research design aims to bolster credibility, reliability, and the overall validity of the findings through a multifaceted validation strategy.
